PARALLAX
PRESS

Dear Friends,

This has been a challenging year. While we are mindful that without the mud, there is no lotus, we've noticed a preponderance of mud. So we find it helpful to remember some of the milestones that got us to this present moment. This year marks the hundredth anniversary of the creation of the US National Parks system. It is the sixtieth anniversary of the March Against Fear, James Meredith's 220-mile march encouraging African Americans to vote. NOW, the National Organization for Women, turns fifty this year. Forty-four years ago the Stonewall riots helped inspire the modern movement for queer rights. And thirty years ago, Thich Nhat Hanh founded Parallax Press.

Clearly, there is still a lot of work to do. And although we are thirty, we are still growing; in 2016, we've launched a new series of illustrated books for children and adults that directly address the fear that seems endemic in these times. Our new books also include an epic story of adventures on the high seas, a guide to helping activists prevent burnout, and a long-awaited collection of autobiographical stories from Thich Nhat Hanh.

We believe that beauty, joy, and justice are basic needs. We believe in prioritizing voices that have been silenced and in speaking uncomfortable truths. These values have guided Parallax Press for the past thirty years and continue to guide us.

We also know that without you there is no us. We'd like to thank you by offering 35 percent off of your next purchase (go to parallax.org/30years). And, if you'd like to see Parallax continue to thrive, become a Friend of Parallax (see the back page for more information) and get 30 percent off of all our titles throughout the year.

We wish you a new year filled with less fear and more connection, a year with many lotuses amid the mud. We look forward to growing together in the years to come.

I knew I couldn't produce as many books in a day as a professional bookbinder or a machine, but I also knew that I loved my work. If you want to have a lot of money, you have to work hard and quickly, but if you live simply, you can work gently and in full awareness.

What would it take for you to enjoy your work?

At Home In The World

Stories and Essential Teachings from a Monk's Life

THICH NHAT HANH, ILLUSTRATED BY JASON DEANTONIS

In his long awaited biography, Zen Master Thich Nhat Hanh shares personal stories from his childhood in Vietnam, his life during war and exile, the founding of Plum Village, and his time traveling and teaching around the world. These stories, told with his signature simplicity and humor, illustrate Nhat Hanh's most essential teachings and share his lifelong difficulties and triumphs.

I look upon the jagged shore to calculate the time until impact. It's difficult to know exactly because the anchors scrape the ocean floor, slowing our descent. The storm is building. Waves the size of cars slam against the bow and drive us backward. The ship's engine picked this moment to break so Dave and I are suddenly, inexplicably, without power. The sun is slipping low so soon we will be without light too.

“Seeing my fear makes it less scary and gives me a sense of peace,” one woman told me. “The fear felt like a bowling ball that I kept holding, but now I’ve thrown it. It’s still out there—might always be out there—but I don’t feel like I’m weighed down.” Fear is deeply embedded in our everyday lives. But you and I, we are not alone.

FEAR

Andrea, 44: "Ever since I was a small child, I have been terrified of the movie Jaws. It is quite irrational to fear while swimming, since I live in a geographically incorrect place for sharks. Even more ridiculous, I have always freaked out about great white shark-fowl-t-shirts, stuffed animals, etc. My fear is that it will be trending unclear water, then BOOM! One will come up and bite down and drag me under."

LOSING TEETH
Joshua, 20

Joshua, 20: "Sometimes I worry that my teeth are just going to randomly fall out of my mouth. Sometimes I have nightmares that they slowly drop out of my head one by one, and I can feel so clearly where they should be, but they're not there. I don't know where this comes from, but braces may have played a role. Braces pulling at my teeth, trying to push them into the correct spots. Also, at the dentist office, when they work on getting them clean, it really stresses me that they're gonna push them right out of my mouth."

An oversized embroidery frame held the fabric beast I'd assembled while I applied teensy little eye-watering, hand-cramping stitches to small areas. It took many, many long evenings of handiwork and the commitment not to give up. When I laid the finished quilt on the bed for the first time, I wept. In front of me was a beautiful object that embodied a sensory landscape of my life's history.

Although mindfulness meditation is popularly associated with sitting still, being present is something we can do during any activity, anywhere, at any time, in the very middle of life. Moving practices, such as walking, can sometimes be more appropriate for lively or agitated minds and bodies than sitting or lying down practices, which can feel entrapping. As adults, we may find that mindful walking allows us to feel more childlike and free again, recalling a time when we used to live more vividly in the present moment.

palm leaves press

The word prajna is usually translated as “wisdom,” but wisdom is somehow not able to convey the meaning. Understanding is like water flowing in a stream. Knowledge can be an obstacle to understanding. If we take something to be the truth, we may cling to it so much that even if the deeper truth comes and knocks at our door, we won’t want to let it in. We must learn to transcend our own views.
